Message From President Evans

It has been just over a year since the Lindenwood Board of Directors asked me to step to the helm of this great frontier university – first as acting president and then as president. What an exhilarating, rewarding experience it has been! When I first walked onto this Eden-like campus more than 33 years ago, I knew I had embarked on a calling that promised a lifetime of service and leadership in values-based higher education. Never did I dream, however, that I would have the chance and honor to contribute to the Lindenwood mission in my present capacity. The opportunity is at once humbling and inspirational.

A successful university must have two foundations: a strong financial/material base and a mission-guided spirit. Throughout its storied history, Lindenwood has had material ups and downs – always managing to survive and then thrive through gifts and blessings, high-quality adaptation (such as the LCIE program that we started in the 1970s), or the advent of gifted leaders (such as John Roemer and Dennis Spellmann). What is even more important, however, is the persistence of the essential spirit of this school, which transcends particular persons, conditions, and times. That spirit consists of a focus on development of the whole person, quality academics for life, and precious relationships among people. Now that God has again blessed us with an era of relative prosperity and material strength, it is up to us to ensure that Lindenwood’s mission is fulfilled in the highest and best possible ways. There is no reason not to be the finest teaching university in the Midwest.

We are progressing briskly toward the latter ideal. Here are just a few highlights of this past year:

- Establishment of our first doctoral degree program (the Ed.D.), with others to follow
- Phenomenal progress on the construction of our Center for Fine and Performing Arts
- Startup of our comprehensive First-Year Student program
- Rebirth of the student newspaper, the Lindenwood Legacy
- Opening of our Weldon Spring Campus, which specializes in technology management
- Expansion of educational programs at our Daniel Boone Campus in Defiance, Mo.
- Development of plans for the “Lindenwood Commons” Student Center
- Implementation of a number of improvements in internal and external communications, including The Connection
- Too many others to list

What a blessing it is to have Lindenwood in our lives! I hope to see you at the Homecoming festivities this October 19-20. Please be sure to join us this year, because I have more good news for you.

Very sincerely yours,

James D. Evans, Ph.D.
President

Investiture Ceremony To Be November 9

Lindenwood University will formally install James D. Evans as its 21st president during ceremonies at 11 a.m. Friday, Nov. 9, 2007, in the Hyland Performance Arena.

A crowd of nearly 2,000 is expected for the ceremony, which will attract state and federal dignitaries and higher education leaders from across the country. Evans says many Lindenwood students will attend the event as well.

The university has not held this formal rite of passage since 1966 when John Anthony Brown became president.

All alumni are welcome. An alums interested in attending the investiture ceremony should contact Director of Alumni Affairs Katy Montgomery at 636-949-4975.

First-Year Experience Energizes Newcomers To Lindenwood

Having students feel connected during their first year of college is of paramount importance to students, parents and the university. To address that, President James D. Evans has instituted a First-Year Experience program for all incoming first-year and transfer students with fewer than 24 transferable hours.

The new program took place the week prior to the beginning of classes and was specifically designed to help enhance each student’s academic, personal and social development. By the time the new students attended their first classes, they had already made friends, met their advisor(s), had seen every building on campus, and knew where to obtain answers to their questions.

In addition, each student received a goodie bag that included a T-shirt, lanyard, stapler, and ID holder. The program lasted for five days with particular emphasis on techniques for high school to college transitioning, mature social interaction, personal responsibility, and how to navigate the university culture.

Some of the highlights included the academic division receptions, the Student Development and Academic Connection, a soccer game, and an ecumenical Service. More than 900 students participated.

Many of the students left with a feeling of belonging, excitement and welcome, which was summed up in one participating student’s statement, “this place rocks!”

“We are all very proud of the work performed by the faculty, Student Development Office, and, most certainly, Dr. Shane Williamson, our director of First-Year Programs, who put on a spectacular event,” said Vice President of Student Development John Oldani.

All first-year students will complete a two-credit-hour Lindenwood University Life 101 course in their first semester. This course is designed to equip every student with the needed tools to succeed at Lindenwood. Topics covered include time management, study skills, critical thinking, classroom etiquette, values clarification, test-taking strategies and Lindenwood University’s history and expectations.

‘07–’08 Academic Year Begins With Record Enrollment; Plans For Expansion

Lindenwood University set a new enrollment record on August 27, opening the academic year with 3,532 resident students.

President James D. Evans said that Lindenwood’s resident population should level out at around 3,475 in late September.

“It’s going to be a little crowded in the cafeteria the first month or so,” Evans said. “But there are lots of food service options. Despite the fact that we are at capacity, move-in went smoothly, and our faculty is energized and ready to start the term.”

Evans announced plans to construct a new student commons building on the LU campus. He said it would be a 40,000- to 50,000-square-foot structure that would enhance student recreation and activity and house a secondary dining hall. In addition, Evans said the university plans on constructing apartment-style housing on 40 acres behind the Hyland Performance Arena off Duchesne Road.
Alum Jim Winka’s Solid Giving History Had Humble Beginnings

Jim Winka received both his bachelor’s and MBA degrees from Lindenwood in 1986 and 1991, respectively. His giving history to Lindenwood began in 1987 with a donation of just $10. Jim made regular gifts, increasing them a little each year. When he started working for McDonnell Douglas and later Boeing, they matched his donation and his annual gifts doubled.

As his career progressed, Jim made a statement of intent to leave Lindenwood at least $1,000 in his will, becoming a member of the Sibley Heritage Society, while still making an annual gift. Jim took advantage of the resources at Lindenwood’s Planned Giving Office prior to meeting with his lawyer for the drafting of his estate plan. Soon he realized another giving opportunity by committing a paid-up life insurance policy to his school in the amount of $25,000, making him eligible for membership in the Butler Society.

Jim has worked hard and invested wisely and now plans to make a substantial bequest from his estate to Lindenwood University. He currently works for the National Archives and Records Administration, whose motto is: “Preserve the Past and Secure the Future”…words that Jim certainly lives by.

Jim Winka was given the tools he needed to succeed from Lindenwood, and his generosity is a shining example of an alumnus doing it right!

KC Alumni Gathering At Kemper Museum

Lindenwood University is planning an exclusive gathering for Kansas City-area alumni and parents from 5-7:30 p.m. on Thursday, Nov. 15, at the Kemper Museum of Contemporary Art.

The group will assemble in the museum atrium for wine and hors d’oeuvres. Lindenwood University President James D. Evans will provide a brief rundown on the university’s growth and outreach efforts, and UMB investment officer William Greiner, 2005 stock market strategist, will give a presentation on investments and the world economy today. UMB is underwriting the gathering for Lindenwood.

“We are absolutely thrilled to have the chance to visit with our alumni and parents in the Kansas City area,” said Evans. “We plan to bring several of our key staff members to the event. We’ve got several special things planned for the evening.”

Evans said Director of Alumni Affairs Katy Montgomery is planning giveaways and Lindenwood’s admissions director is hoping to present scholarships to top Kansas City-area students that evening.

“We think everyone is going to have a wonderful time,” said Vice President for Institutional Advancement Lucy Morros. “This is a way for all of us to renew old friendships and establish new ones. We think this event will be a tremendous success, and we are looking forward to similar gatherings in other cities around the country.”

For more information on the Kansas City alumni gathering, please contact Montgomery via email at kmontgomery@lindenwood.edu or call her at 636-949-4975.

DONOR SPOTLIGHT

Jim Winka on a recent campus visit.
Internationally known piano virtuoso Sasha Starcevich will open Lindenwood University’s new Center for Fine and Performing Arts with a special sneak preview concert in September 2008.

This announcement is being made in connection to give alumni the first chance to secure tickets to this special event, said President James D. Evans. The Center for Fine and Performing Arts is a $32 million, 138,000-square-foot structure being built on the southern tip of campus.

“We want our alumni to be in the house when we open the doors,” said Evans. “This will be a memorable evening. The entire campus will be buzzing.”

Starcevich is enjoying an amazing career as an international performer and teacher. He has performed with orchestras throughout Canada, the U.S., China and Europe and has toured Russia with the Samara Philharmonic Orchestra. He has been an adjunct professor of music at the State University of New York, department chair of music and professor of piano at the South Carolina Governor’s School for the Arts, and has had years of private studio teaching across the country.

Starcevich has a Ph.D. in music from Yale University. While at Lindenwood, Starcevich will also conduct a master class with LU music students who are concentrating on piano studies.

Lindenwood’s Dean of Fine and Performing Arts, Marsha Parker, credits a special friend of the university and an accomplished musician in her own right, Betty Britten, with bringing Starcevich to Lindenwood for the concert.

To place your name on a waiting list for tickets, please contact Katy Montgomery, director of alumni affairs, at 636-949-4975.
Michael Castro Has Inspired Lindenwood Students For Nearly 30 Years

All college grads have that favorite professor or two. Their images are permanently embedded into the memory banks of alumni, young and old.

Perhaps they provided friendship in a time of need. Maybe they offered life-changing career advice. Maybe they just had that magnetism that made people want to learn.

At Lindenwood University there are many who make the favorites list. One whose name comes up constantly is Michael Castro. He has been impacting the lives of adult evening students in Lindenwood’s accelerated program for working adults, LCIE (Lindenwood College for Individualized Education), for nearly 30 years.

Castro is an accomplished poet. He has been called “a fascinating instructor who has a way of making you want to know more.” He is a seasoned academic and career advisor. And he has a unique perspective on adult education.

“‘You think most adults are already shaped,’” Castro said. “‘But their growth through the LCIE program is evident. You see their self-confidence and self-esteem grow as they move along. The changes are very noticeable. They exceed their own expectations.’”

Castro attributes that personal growth to the way LCIE operates.

“The emphasis is on writing and presentation,” he said. “That helps build things in their everyday life and helps them realize their abilities. It shows up in their demeanor.”

Castro remembers the early days of Lindenwood’s LCIE Communications program and its unpretentious beginnings. Today, however, he is busy advising and teaching. He has contributed to the award-winning LCIE program and says he would love to see the MFA in writing continue to expand and perhaps produce a publication. He would also like to see the university develop a visiting writers program.

He loves to hear from former students, and oftentimes the feedback fuels and motivates Castro.

“I am happy to hear students say a class inspired them or made them think or see the world in a different way,” he said. “I see education as a pathway to growth and self-realization. It is nice to see some students come here with that open attitude or perhaps get it after they arrive at Lindenwood.”

Castro said he is “inspired by a good discussion. There is a certain kind of energy in the classroom. I am also inspired by a good poem, a sunny day...a view of the mountains.”

Poetry has been an enormous interest and influence in Castro’s life. He has a long list of poets he admires, including Allen Ginsberg, Jerome Rothenberg, Howard Schwartz and Quincy Troupe. Troupe was Castro’s longtime co-editor of “River Styx.” Castro founded River Styx as a literary organization in 1975, and it later developed into a magazine.

As one might expect, Castro spends much of his free time delving into literature and “spending times with friends involved in that world.” These days one might find him performing poetry and music at a local synagogue or spending time with his wife of 20 years, Adelia, a photographer, sculptor and college educator.

Castro is proud of his “tribe” of three children and seven grandchildren and he loves basketball and baseball, art and music and teaching at Lindenwood.

If you would like to contact Dr. Castro, please email him at mcastro@lindenwood.edu.
LU Brings In Top-Notch Faculty Members; Most Have Earned Doctorates

Lindenwood University has announced the addition of 23 new full-time faculty members in a wide array of departments, including education, science, management, religion, music and many others. While many received their education in the St. Louis area, there are also representatives of schools in New Orleans, Wisconsin, Kansas and many others.

Lindenwood President James D. Evans said the new faculty reflect LU’s commitment to academic excellence.

“This is a truly outstanding group of people,” Evans said. “I am very pleased with their appointment and Lindenwood is proud of have them join our excellent faculty.”

They include:
- Annie Alameda, assistant professor of physical education. She has a bachelor’s from Illinois State University and a master’s from St. Louis University.
- Gerald J. Dunn, associate professor of mathematics. He has a doctorate from the University of Michigan and has extensive real-world experience.
- Shannon James Flynn, assistant professor of biology. With a doctorate in microbiology from the University of Tennessee, Flynn has taught extensively and has been published in a variety of journals.
- Larry Granda, assistant professor of mathematics. He earned his master’s and doctorate from St. Louis University and has taught there as well.
- Pamela Grooms, assistant professor of music. She has a master’s from the University of Missouri—St. Louis and has been a pianist with the St. Louis Philharmonic Orchestra.
- Evelyn Hendrix, assistant professor of management. With a doctorate from George Mason University, Hendrix brings extensive experience as an instructor and as a business consultant for higher education and the private sector.
- Shannon Highley, assistant professor of management. She has an MBA and two bachelor’s degrees from Southern Illinois University—Edwardsville.
- Eve Jones, assistant professor of humanities. She has an MFA in creative writing from the University of Missouri—St. Louis, where she has also taught and has been recognized for her poetry.
- Holly Beth Karraker, assistant professor of education. She will teach in the graduate counseling program. She has a doctorate, a master’s and a bachelor’s from St. Louis University.

“This is truly an outstanding group of people.”
— James D. Evans

- Jason Dude Lively, associate professor of communications. He earned a doctorate from Nova Southeastern University and also had degrees from Tarleton State University and Howard Payne University.
- Nadine Menninga, assistant professor of mathematics. She has a doctorate in mathematics from the University of Illinois.
- Billi Patzius, assistant professor of criminal justice. She has a master’s in criminology, as well as two other degrees, from the University of Missouri—St. Louis. She also has experience working in the family courts in a number of capacities.
- Renee Porter, assistant professor of management information systems. She has a doctorate from St. Louis University and additional degrees from Southern Illinois University and the University of Southern Mississippi.
- P. Joseph Powers, assistant professor of education. With a doctorate from St. Louis University, he brings extensive academic credentials and 33 years of school administration and teaching experience in Norway and the United States.
- Keith Russell, assistant professor of humanities. He has a doctorate from Southern Illinois University—Carbondale with additional degrees from Southeast Missouri State University and Truman State University. He also has experience as a published writer and as an instructor.
- Robert J. Stephens, assistant professor of religion. He has a doctorate from the University of Iowa with additional degrees from the University of Kansas and Missouri State University.
- Terrance A. Stewart, assistant professor of education. He has a doctorate from the University of Missouri—Columbia and has worked as a high school teacher and principal, as school superintendent, and as assistant commissioner of the Division of Administration for the Missouri Department of Elementary and Secondary Education.
- F. Robert Talbott, assistant professor of management. He has an MBA from Lindenwood and is currently working toward a doctorate in business administration from the University of Missouri—St. Louis. He has worked as a consultant, software engineer, multimedia programmer and applications developer for a variety of companies.
- Jeanie Thies, assistant professor of criminal justice. She has a doctorate from the University of Missouri—St. Louis, as well as additional degrees from UM—St. Louis and the University of Missouri—Columbia.
- Julie Turner, assistant professor of nonprofit administration. She has a doctorate from the University of Missouri—St. Louis and other degrees from Michigan State University and Hope College.
- Joyce A. West, assistant professor of education. She has a doctorate in education administration from St. Louis University and additional degrees from Washington University. Throughout her career, she has worked in a variety of administrative posts in public education.
- Shane Y. Williamson, associate professor of education and director of First-Year Programs. She has a doctorate from Rutgers University and additional degrees from Shippensburg University. She has worked as an administrator at a number of colleges and universities.
- Paul S. Wright, associate professor of physical education and head cross country/track coach. He has a doctorate from the University of Utah and additional degrees from Clemson University. He has worked in a variety of posts in education and parks and recreation and has been a successful coach at the college level.
Dean Ed Morris Uses Lindenwood As Laboratory For New Book

Lindenwood University Dean of Management Ed Morris has written a book sure to rock the cozy, comfy world of higher education. “The Lindenwood Model: An Antidote for What Ails Undergraduate Education” will be on sale soon in bookstores and is available now to LU alums in the campus Spirit & Supplies Shoppe.

The implicit message in this book, published by the Lindenwood Press, is that higher education is on a collision course with reality. Morris writes that over the last several decades, colleges and universities have greatly expanded their reach and scope, most becoming “multiversities” of one form or another. Morris says their growth has not been accompanied by the scales of economy to be expected.

“Most schools suffer from low productivity and runaway costs,” Morris writes. “At the same time, the quality of their core product, undergraduate education, has become highly suspect.”

A second message in the book, perhaps not so implicit, is that the Lindenwood University model, which operates much differently than most colleges and universities, may provide valuable lessons for bringing academia back to reality. Morris, who received his Ph.D. from St. Louis University, joined the faculty at Lindenwood University in 2002. He will sign copies of his book for LU alumni on Homecoming Weekend during the alumni reception at 5 p.m. Friday, Oct. 19. Should you desire a copy of the book before then, contact John Snipes in the Spirit and Supplies at 636-949-7670 or visit the store, which is located off First Capitol Drive in the strip center near Auto Zone.

Can You Text? Service Helps Keep Students Informed In Emergencies

Lindenwood University this fall will have the ability to send emergency text messages to its students.

President James D. Evans has signed a contract with clearTXT, a company that will provide the service. Evans said the university will only use text messaging for important alerts and emergencies.

The system will be voluntary, Evans said, but the university strongly encourages all students to participate. Students began registering for the service during early check-in in July and August. LU performed a successful test of the system just after Labor Day.

“We hope we will never have to use this service,” said Evans. “But we need a quick and reliable way to communicate with our students in an emergency. Text messaging is undoubtedly going to be a faster way of communicating than email.”

Evans said the university began talks with clearTXT late in 2006, but the tragedy at Virginia Tech “caused us to speed up the process and examine how we could more efficiently handle crisis communications.”

Lindenwood is absorbing the full $4,000 cost for the one-year contract with clearTXT and will not pass on that cost to students. However, students who do not have free text messaging as part of their cellular plans may be charged for Lindenwood text messages. Evans said such a message typically costs the recipient about 10 cents.

University officials say text messaging will not be the only way they will communicate with students in an emergency. Lindenwood plans to continue broadcast emails to students in emergencies, as well as update the university website. But Evans said a text message will be quicker and will reach more students than an email.
We have a wide variety of university and alumni apparel, including polos, sweatshirts, T-shirts, button-down twills, and more. All are specifically monogrammed with printing or embroidery that proudly displays the Lindenwood name. Shipping is available.

Lindenwood is among the collegiate leaders in the United States in the number of athletic opportunities available for its students. That number will grow this year as the athletics department has added men’s and women’s cycling.

The sport is a great fit for the Lindenwood campus. Cycling is one of the fastest-growing sports in the country. It is also very popular in Missouri, as evidenced by the Tour of Missouri race in September, one stage of which will end in St. Charles.

Darren Marhanka helped bring cycling to Lindenwood, and he will serve as the teams’ head coach in their inaugural season as varsity programs.

Marhanka, a former police officer in North County, has taught in the criminal justice department at Lindenwood since 2004. Last year, he started a cycling club program, funding most of it out of his own pockets.

“The students competed strong, were well-behaved and, most importantly, enjoyed their experience,” said Marhanka about last year’s club team.

Based on the success of last year’s club team, Lindenwood made cycling the 39th and 40th sports programs at the school. By making it a varsity sport, Marhanka is able to offer scholarship to future riders, and he will no longer have to personally fund travel costs.

Two Lindenwood coaches and five Lady Lion players got a taste of international competition this summer when they participated in the 2007 Prague Lacrosse Cup in Czechoslovakia.

Jack Cribbin, Lindenwood’s women’s lacrosse and field hockey head coach, was the head coach of this summer’s American International Sports Tours (AIST) Blue team, which was one of 13 teams to compete in the international women’s lacrosse tournament. He was joined in the Czech Republic by Lindenwood women’s lacrosse assistant coach Aynie Linneman and players Kandee Schroeder, Jackie Noble, Laura Boland, Darby Hogan, and Katie Veile.

Their squad, which was mostly made up of NCAA Division II and III players, went 3-3-1 at the Prague Cup and finished sixth. The Lady Lion athletes held their own at the event, especially Boland who was named one of two team MVPs for the tournament.

Cribbin hopes that with the experience those players received in Prague, Lindenwood will now be in a position to make a run at a national title in 2008.

“‘It was an unbelievable trip,’ said Cribbin. ‘Our team became a very tight group during that week and the event was very exciting. The sport of lacrosse is really starting to grow in Europe, and it was great to be a part of an international experience like that.’ The biggest benefit for Lindenwood will come this spring when the Lady Lions take the lacrosse field. Four players that went on this trip will return to the Lindenwood program which won a conference title and advanced to the national tournament in 2007.

Cribbin hopes that with the experience those players received in Prague, Lindenwood will now be in a position to make a run at a national title in 2008.

‘‘I would definitely do this trip again in a heartbeat,’’ said Cribbin. ‘‘The players will take the experiences they had at this event with them for the rest of their lives.’’

Impromptu Reunion
This group of Lindenwood alums hadn’t seen one another since graduation years and years ago. They planned to meet on campus and avail themselves of a tour from Director of Alumni Affairs Katy Montgomery, who was waiting with goodie bags. They told stories and had a grand tour of the campus.

This is Your Last Chance to Avoid All Taxes on your IRA Distribution by Donating to Lindenwood University

Dear Alumni, Constituents and Friends,

It is now time to consider your year-end tax planning. The Pension Protection Act of 2006 still allows certain tax-free donations of your IRA, but that provision will expire on December 31, 2007.

This legislation grants an extraordinary benefit to individuals who are 70 1/2 years of age or older without recognizing income and without the necessity of taking a charitable deduction. This solves the problems of taxable mandatory withdrawal requirements, which would ordinarily be taxed, and charitable gift percentage limitations, which could limit your charitable donation tax benefits.

Do You Qualify?

Individuals who are 70 1/2 years of age or older are allowed to make a gift from their traditional or Roth IRA up to $100,000 this year to Lindenwood University FREE of federal income tax. You could make a tax-free gift of $100, $1,000, $10,000 or any amount up to $100,000. If you do not qualify, please pass this information on to a friend or loved one who would.

How Do I Do It?

Assets up to $100,000 must be rolled over directly to Lindenwood University from your account. You should call your financial institution or advisor for a distribution form requesting a payout directly to Lindenwood. The process is simple and easy.

When Should This Be Done?

NOW! The limit for such gifts is $100,000 and it must be completed by December 31, 2007. (Hint: If you spouse owns an IRA, a second gift can be made to the university.) The IRA Rollover Gift is a great way to reduce the cost of your gift to Lindenwood and maximize the good that it will do to help our students succeed. Please consider this type of gift in your year-end tax planning.

My office will make itself available to you in all aspects of gift planning and other contributions. Please allow me to help you help Lindenwood by giving me a call at (636) 949-4617. Thank you for being a Lindenwood supporter!

Sincerely,

Eric O. Stuhler

Does Your Company Do Matching Gifts?

You may be able to double or even triple your tax-deductible gift and future gifts to Lindenwood University if your employer has a Matching Gift Program. It’s easy - find out from your Human Resource Department if your company offers a Matching Gift Program. Next, simply obtain and complete the employee section of the company’s matching gift form and send it along with your donation to Lindenwood. The university will complete the organization’s portion of the form and return it to your company. Keep in mind - retirees, spouses, and employees of subsidiary companies may also be eligible to participate in matching gift programs.

The fall semester has begun at Lindenwood University, and the campus is buzzing with activity!

Lindenwood has an exceptional freshman class this semester. Some of the highlights of the class are: 44 scored over a 30 on the ACT, 48 graduated with a perfect 4.0 GPA, 6 were valedictorians, 5 were salutatorians, and 8 were Student Council presidents. Quite an impressive class!

On behalf of the Lindenwood Alumni Association, I would like to invite you to Reunion and Homecoming Weekend on October 19 and 20. This year’s theme is “Come Home to Lindenwood.” Lindenwood was our home for a number of years, and this will be a great weekend to reminisce about our college days and catch up with friends.

At 4:30 p.m. Friday, October 19, our Alumni Reception will be held in the Hyland Performance Arena. There will be an Alumni/Parents Breakfast with President and Mrs. Evans on Saturday, October 20. I hope you will cheer for the Lions at the Homecoming Football game Saturday at 1:30 against William Jewell College.

Please consider making a class gift to Lindenwood. Your gifts are 100 percent designated to scholarship assistance, and your generosity makes a real difference to our students.

For additional information on Reunion and Homecoming see Page 9. To give a class gift, please call Director of Alumni Affairs Katy Montgomery at (636) 949-4975.

Keep Up With Your Alma Mater — Download Custom ‘Toolbar’ Today

Lindenwood University alumni and friends have an opportunity to streamline their Internet searching, help LU financially and keep up-to-date with what’s going on at LU by downloading a new toolbar.

President James D. Evans has signed an agreement with BenefitBar.com to create a special Lindenwood toolbar. There is no cost to download the toolbar, and no cost to Lindenwood University.

“BenefitBar provides a constant stream of information for our alumni, faculty, staff and friends,” said Evans. “And it allows us to generate revenue, too. The toolbar has a Yahoo search engine, and each time a person uses the search, Lindenwood shares in the revenue generated by that search.”

BenefitBar is free of spyware, adware and viruses and will respect a user’s privacy.

Once installed, users will be able to do searches in a very convenient and easy way, as well as get to the Lindenwood website and other links Lindenwood offers with a simple click.

Please be aware that Microsoft’s Internet Explorer 7 has issues with all toolbars and anyone with IE7 may experience difficulty with BenefitBar or any other toolbar.

To install BenefitBar on your computer at home, go to:

1. You will see optional fields to fill in regarding email address and zip code. Please check box for terms agreement and click on “download now.”

2. At this point a popup blocker notice may appear. If the popup notice does NOT appear, go to #4. If it does, click on the yellow notice and hit “download file.”

3. You may then see a message about page refreshing. Click “retry.”

4. Click Run-Run-Install-Finish…

5. After you click on “Finish,” please close your internet browser and re-open a new browser.

6. Click on “View” at top of page, then “toolbar.” Then click or check the word “BenefitBar” and the BenefitBar should appear on your screen.
